MOKENA FACES HOT VILLAGE ELECTION TUES.

The voters of Mokena will be called on to vote once more on next Tuesday when the village election will be held. With three tickets in the field, interest in the election is running high.

The fight will be hot all down the line, and especially for the office of mayor or president of the village board. On Independent No. 1 ticket, Walter Olson is the candidate for the office. He has served as village trustee for the past few years and has made a good record. Instead of running for re-election for the office of village trustee, his friends induced him to run for the presidency of the board. Opposing him on Independent ticket No. 2 is Harry F. Mall, Mokena lumber dealer who served as mayor of Mokena for one term a number of years ago.

Six village trustees are to be elected and the following ten candidates are in the race for these offices: Robert O. Geuther, William Semmler, Willard Martie, James A. Egerston, J. G. Oswald, Albert Braun, Lloyd Warning, Frederick Rauch, Harold W. Spiess, and Byron F. Nelson.

Everett Cooper, assistant cashier of the Mokena State Bank and John H. Nordell, Rock Island Signal Maintainer, are contending for the office of village clerk.

One office for which a real fight will be made, is that of police magistrate. No candidate filed for this office, so blank spaces appear on the tickets on the ballot for this office.

Voters will be asked to write in the name of their candidate and place an X in the square in front of their name.

Those in the race for the police magistrate's office are: Thomas Moore, Paul J. Roessner, Albert H. Hentsch and Don C. Hall Jr.

The polls will open next Tuesday morning in the village hall on Front street at six o'clock and will close at five o'clock.

Thank You!

I sincerely thank the voters of Orland Township for the fine support they accorded me at the town election last Tuesday.

Fred E. Yunker,
Sup. Orland Township

Hail Accompanies Heavy Rain

In Tinley Park some of the hailstones were the size of pigeon eggs. A heavy electrical storm caused the electric lights to go out but service was quickly restored. No particular damage was reported.

Says Barr Bill Will Create Many Incorporate Evils

Senate Bill 246, introduced by Senator Richard J. Barr of Joliet, and which would abolish the sale of alcoholic liquors outside of incorporated villages, seems to be headed for some tough sledding when it reaches the House.

When interviewed concerning this Bill Representative Joseph Sam Perry said, "I am in harmony with the objective that Senator Barr has in mind, but I can not agree with this Bill in its present form. In fact, I think it would be a very detrimental piece of legislation. My reason for believing so is that there is nothing to prevent the organization of numerous irresponsible municipalities throughout Du Page County and Will County who would be absolutely under the control of liquor dealers and who would sell the liquor without any regulations whatsoever. In other words, I feel the Bill would be evaded by a subterfuge in the form of newly incorporated villages which would serve as a haven for the criminal element and which would be out of the reach of the Board of Supervisors. Before this Bill becomes a law, it should certainly be amended so as to place the power of appeal in the County Board of Supervisors or the County Liquor Commission."

Knock Out Thieves Caught With Pastor's Goose By Highway Cop

Poultry thieves believe in being modern in their "profession" as was recently demonstrated by two Joliet men, who gave their names as John Volyan and Blas Kayfus who used the following novel method of getting their fowl:

They had fastened a hammer head at the end of a long stick and when they got up to the Southwest Community Center Foundation operated by Rev. Paul T. Sanders on the Southwest Highway in Palos, they saw some fine looking geese inside the fence. One of the men went to the fence and roused the geese while the partner reached over the fence with the long handled hammer and knocked out Mr. Goose and with the claw of the hammer hauled him to the fence and sized the coveted fowl.

A passing autoist from Blue Island saw the performance and when the Joliet men pulled out he trailed them. They drove into Palos on the Southwest highway then turned on Keane and headed south. The Blue Island man kept following and when he reached 159th and Keane he saw a highway cop and told him what had occurred. The cop was Highway Policeman Miller who took after the thieves and arrested them.

The geese they had taken belonged to Rev. Mr. Sanders and was a registered goose.

The men were brought before Judge Ray Brennan of Orland township. In addition to being charged with larceny, the men also were charged with speeding and running by a stop sign. Judge Brennan bound them over to the County court and they were taken to the County Jail in Chicago.

Hundreds Cheer Election Winner In Go Cart Ride

Fully 500 people witnessed the paying of the election bet between Albert H. Hentsch and George Bennett last Sunday afternoon when Hentsch pushed Bennett in a baby buggy from the Bauman corner in Frankfort to the Lincoln highway. From here the paraders went by auto to the junction of the Lincoln Highway and Wolf Road from which point Hentsch wheeled Bennett in the baby carriage to Mokena. A large crowd followed the two in cars on foot and on bicycles.

Upon arriving in Mokena Bennett thought Hentsch should also have a ride in the baby carriage and he accordingly gave him a ride up and down Front street.

Both men were candidates for the office of constable in the recent Frankfort township election and Hentsch lost by 7 votes, hence the paying of the election bet.

The parade provoked much merriment both in Frankfort and Mokena.

Supt. Booth did state, however, that the vote was in favor of the tax increase mentioned by a wide margin in New Lenox, Elwood, Mokena and Frankfort and it is his opinion that the proposition carried. In Mokena 95 votes were cast for and 14 against the proposition.

The Garden Murder Case

"Not now. No," Vance returned. "A little bromin gas a few minutes ago; but the air will be clear in a little while. No casualties. Every one doing well . . . Did you want to see me?"

Garden looked round at the group on the roof with a puzzled air.

"Awfully sorry to interrupt you, Vance; but the fact is, I came for the doctor." His eyes rested on Siefert, and he smiled dryly. "It's the usual thing, doc," he said. "The mater seems almost in a state of collapse—she assured me that she hadn't an ounce of strength left."

A worried look came into Siefert's eyes.

"I'll come at once, of course," he said. He looked at the nurse and then lifted his gaze to Vance. "Will you excuse me?"

Vance bowed. "Certainly, doctor. But I think Miss Beeton had better remain here in the air for a while longer."

Vance watched them until they turned through the door of the passageway; then he spoke to the nurse.

"Please sit here a few minutes, Miss Beeton. I want to have a talk with you. But first I'd like a minute or two with Mr. Hammle."

The nurse nodded her assent and sat down a little wearily on the settee.

Vance beckoned curtly to Hammle. "Suppose we go inside for a moment."

Hammle rose with alacrity. "I was wondering how much longer you gentlemen were going to keep me here."

Vance led the way into the study, and Markham and I followed behind Hammle.

"What were you doing on the roof, Mr. Hammle?" asked Vance. "I told you some time ago, after our brief interview, that you might go."

Hammle fidgeted. He was patently apprehensive and wary.

"There's no crime in going out into the garden for a while—is there?" he asked with unimpressive truculence.

"None whatever," Vance returned casually. "I was wonderin' why you preferred the gardens to going home. Devilish things have been happening in the garden this afternoon."

"As I told you, I wish I had gone. How did I know—?"

"That's hardly the point, Mr. Hammle," Vance cut him short. "It doesn't answer my question."

"Well now, look here," Hammle explained fulsomely; "I had just missed a train to Long Island, and it was more than an hour until the next one. When I went out of here and started to go downstairs, I suddenly said to myself, 'It'll be pleasant waiting in the garden than in the Pennsylvania station.' So I went out on the roof and hung around. And here I am."

Vance regarded the man shrewdly and nodded his head.

"Yes, as you say. Here you are. More or less in evidence. By the by, Mr. Hammle, what did you see while you were waiting in the garden for the next train?"

"Not a thing—absolutely!" Hammle's tone was aggressive. "I walked along the boxwood hedges, smoking, and was leaning over the parapet by the gate, looking out at the city, when I heard you come out carrying the nurse."

Vance narrowed his eyes: it was obvious he was not satisfied with Hammle's explanation.

"And you saw no one else either in the garden or on the terrace?" "Not a soul," the man assured him.

"And you heard nothing?"

"Not until you gentlemen came out."

Vance stood regarding Hammle for several moments. Then he turned and walked toward the garden window.

"That will be all for the moment," he said brusquely. "But we shall probably want to see you tomorrow."

"I'll be at home all day. Glad to be of any service." Hammle shot a covert look at Vance, made his adieux quickly, and went out down the passageway.

Vance returned at once to the garden. Miss Beeton drew herself up a little as he approached her.

"Do you feel equal to a few questions?" he asked her.

"Oh, yes," she smiled with more assurance now, and rose.

As we crossed the garden to the balustrade, Miss Beeton took a deep breath and shuddered slightly.

"You'd better have your coat," Vance suggested. He returned to the study and brought it out to her.

When he had helped her into it she turned suddenly and looked at him inquiringly.

"Why was my coat brought to the study?" she asked.

Vance's tone was reassuring. We really owe you an explanation. You see, two revolvers figured in Swift's death. One of them we all saw on the roof here—that was the one with which the chap was killed. But no one downstairs heard the shot because the poor fellow met his end in Professor Garden's storeroom vault—"

"Ah! That was why you wanted to know if the key was in its place."

The girl nodded.

"The shot we all heard," Vance went on, "was fired from another revolver after Swift's body had been carried from the vault and placed in the chair out here. We were naturally anxious to find that other weapon, and Sergeant Heath made a search for it . . ."

"But—but—my coat?" Her hand went out and she clutched at Vance's sleeve as a look of understanding came into her frightened eyes.

"Yes," Vance said, "the Sergeant found the revolver in the pocket of your top-coat. Someone had put it there as a temporary hiding-place." She recoiled with a sudden intake of breath.

"How dreadful!" Her words were barely audible.

Vance put his hand on her shoulder.

"But it's too terrible! . . . And then this—this attempt on my life. I can't understand. I'm frightened."

"Come, come," Vance exhorted the girl. "It's over now, and we need your help."

She gazed directly into his eyes for several minutes. Then she gave him a faint smile of confidence.

"I'm very sorry," she said simply. "But this house—this family—they've been doing queer things to my nerves for the past month. I can't explain it, but there's something frightfully wrong here . . . I was in charge of an operating room in a Montreal hospital for six months, attending as many as six and eight operations a day; but that never affected me the way this household does. There, at least, I could see what was going on—I could help and know that I was helping. But here everything goes on in dark corners, and nothing I do seems to be of any use . . ."

But please don't think I am not ready to help—to do anything I can for you. You, too, always have to work in the dark, don't you?"

"Don't we all have to work in the dark?" Vance murmured, without taking his eyes from her. "Tell me who you think could have been guilty of the terrible things that have happened here."

All fear and doubt seemed to have left the girl. She moved toward the balustrade and stood looking over the river with an impressive calm and self-control.

"Vance! Come Down From There!"

All fear and doubt seemed to have left the girl. She moved toward the balustrade and stood looking over the river with an impressive calm and self-control.

CHAPTER XI

"Woode Swift's death wasn't at all the sort of thing I would expect to happen here," the nurse said.

"I wouldn't have been surprised at some act of impulsive violence, but this premeditated murder, so subtle and so carefully planned, seems alien to the atmosphere here. Besides, it isn't a loving family, except on the surface. Floyd Garden is saner than the others. His interests are narrow, to be sure, but, on his own mental level. He's dependable, too, I think."

She paused and frowned.

"As for Mrs. Garden, I feel that by nature she is shallow and is deliberately creating for herself a deeper and more complex mode of life, which she doesn't in the least understand. That, of course, makes her unreasonable and dangerous. I have never had a more unreasonable patient. She has no consideration whatever for others."

"And Professor Garden?"

"He's a researcher and scientist, of course, and, therefore, not altogether human, in the conventional sense. I have thought sometimes that he isn't wholly rational."

"What is your impression of the guests who were present today?"

Vance said.

"I don't feel competent to pass judgment on them," the girl replied seriously. "I can't entirely understand them. But each one strikes me as dangerous in his own way. They are all playing a game—and it seems to be a game without rules. To them the outcome justifies the methods they use."

"Yes, quite. You have clear vision," Vance scrutinized the girl beside him. "And you took up nursing because you are able to face the realities. You are not afraid of life—or of death."

The girl looked embarrassed.

"You're making too much of my profession. After all, I had to earn my living, and nursing appealed to me."

"Yes, of course. It would," Vance nodded. "But tell me, wouldn't you rather not have to work for your living?"

She looked up.

"Perhaps. But isn't it natural for every woman to prefer luxury and security to drudgery and uncertainty?"

"No doubt," said Vance. "And speakin' of nursing, just what do you think of Mrs. Garden's condition?"

Miss Beeton hesitated before she answered.

"Really, I don't know what to say. I can't understand it. And I rather suspect that Doctor Siefert himself is puzzled by it. Mrs. Garden is obviously a sick woman. She shows many of the symptoms of that nervous, erratic temperament exhibited by people suffering from cancer. Though she's much better some days than others, I know that she suffers a great deal. Doctor Siefert tells me she is really a neurological case; but I get the feeling, at times, that it goes much deeper—that an obscure physiological condition is producing the neurological symptoms she shows."

"That's most interestin'. Doctor Siefert mentioned something of the kind to me only a few days ago."

Vance moved nearer to the girl. "Would you mind telling me something of your contacts with the members of the household?"

"There's very little to tell. Professor Garden practically ignores me—half the time I doubt if he even knows I am there. Mrs. Garden alternates between periods of irritable admonition and intimate confidence. Floyd Garden has always been pleasant and considerate. I've rather liked him for his attitude."

"And what of Swift—did you see much of him?"

The girl seemed reluctant to answer.

"The truth is, Mr. Swift asked me several times to go to dinner and the theater with him. I got the impression that he was one of those unhappy men who feel their inferiority and seek to bolster themselves up with the affections of women. I think that he was really concerned with Miss Graem, and merely turned to me through pique."

Vance smoked for a few moments in silence. Then he said:

"What of the big race today? Had there been much discussion about it?"

"Oh, yes. For over a week I've heard little else here. A curious tension has been growing in the house. I heard Mr. Swift remark to Floyd Garden one evening that the Rivermont Handicap was his one remaining hope, and that he thought Equanimity would win."

"Was it generally known to the other members of the afternoon gatherings how Swift felt about this race and Equanimity?"

"Yes, the matter was freely discussed for days."

"By the by," asked Vance, "how did you come to bet on Azure Star?"

"Frankly," the girl confessed shyly, "I've been mildly interested in the horse—betting parties here, though I've never had any desire to make a wager myself. But I overheard you tell Mr. Garden that you had picked Azure Star, and the name was so appealing that I asked Mr. Garden to place that bet for me. It was the first time I ever bet on a horse."

"And Azure Star came in," Vance sighed. "Too bad. Actually you bet against Equanimity, you know—he was the favorite. A big gamble. Most unfortunate that you won. Beginner's luck, d'ye see, is always fatal."

The girl's face became suddenly sombre, and she looked steadily at Vance for several moments before she spoke again.

"Do you really think it will prove fatal?"

"Yes. Oh, yes. Inevitable. You won't be able to resist making other wagers. One doesn't stop with the first bet if one wins. And, invariably, one loses in the end."

Again the girl gave Vance a long and troubled look; then her gaze drifted to the darkening sky overhead.

"But Azure Star is a beautiful name, isn't it?" She pointed upward.

"There's one now."

We all looked up. High above we saw a single bright star shining with blue luminosity in the cloudless sky. After a moment Vance moved toward the parapet and looked out over the waters of the river to the purpling hills and the still glowing sunset colors in the west.

"No city in the world," Vance said, "is as beautiful as New York seen from a vantage point like this in the early twilight." (I wondered at his sudden change of mood.)

He stepped up on the parapet and looked down into the great abyss of deep shadows and flickering lights far below. A curious chill of fear ran over me—the sort of fear I have always felt when I have seen acrobatic performers perilously balanced high above a circus arena.

Miss Beeton was standing close to Markham, and she, too, must have experienced something of the sensation I felt, for I saw her face go suddenly pale. Her eyes were fixed on Vance with a look of apprehensive horror.

"Vance!" It was Markham's stern voice that broke the silence. "Come down from there!"

Lesson for April 18

THE EFFECTS OF ALOCHOLIC BEVERAGES

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 13:13; 19:23-25; Deuteronomy 32:31-33; Proverbs 23:29-32.
GOLDEN TEXT—At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. Proverbs 23:32.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Man Who Had First Choice.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Way of Woe.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Science Says About Alcohol.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Scientific Basis of Temperance.

The American people are alert to the forces which threaten the bulwarks of national life, and are ready to take intelligent and effective action against them when fully aroused to the danger. The powers of evil know this to be true and are careful to avoid anything that directs our attention to what is constantly going on under cover. The liquor question is one of our nation's most serious problems. The devastating results of the widespread sale and use of intoxicants will only be known as Christian men and women unmask this wicked business which poses under the banner of congenial and pleasant living, and proudly points to its recognition by the government as a legal enterprise.

The facts are available through various temperance organizations and in such books as "Alcohol and Man," by Dr. Emerson of Columbia university. The Sunday School lessons for 1937 present four opportunities to bring the matter squarely before the adults and children who are in our Bible Schools. We have already (Jan. 31) considered the economic problem, and will later deal with temperance as a social and moral evil. The lesson for today affords a special opportunity to touch on the scientific side, presenting intoxicants in their true light as a poison. Look up the word "intoxicate" in a good dictionary and you at once have a picture of what beer, wine, and whiskey do to the human body.

The Christian approach to any consideration of the matter is by recognizing that man is a spiritual being, dwelling in a physical body.

I. We Live in a World of Moral Responsibility (Gen. 13:13; 19:23-25).

Life is not a careless drifting from day to day, from pleasure to pleasure, into sin or not as one may choose, with no responsibility for one's actions. Man was created in the likeness and image of God. He possesses the power of choice. He knows right from wrong. If he chooses to do right he has all the resources of the omnipotent God to call upon as his strength and stay. But if he chooses to turn his back upon God and upon Christ, and to go into the ways of sin, let him be sure that there is a day of judgment to come from which he shall in no wise escape. The destruction of the wicked cities of the plain, terrible as it was in itself, is but a prophecy of judgment to come. See Luke 10:10-12.

II. Men Go Two Different Ways (Deut. 32:31-33).

Moses contrasts the Rock in which his people trusted, and the corrupt standards of their heathen neighbors by which they were tempted. One greater than Moses spoke of the two ways (read Matt. 7:13, 14), and pointed out the sad fact that there are many that go down the broad way to destruction, and few who walk in the narrow way of life. Let us seek to win our young men and women away from the sinful ways of this world.

III. The Liquor Way Is the Wrong Way (Prov. 23:29-32).

Skilful indeed are the advertising devices of the liquor interests! They associate their intoxicants (poisons) with holiday festivities, happy family gatherings, social preferment, and so on. They do not picture the bleary eye, the babbling tongue, the "wounds without cause." They carefully overlook the broken-hearted mother, the ragged children, the empty cupboard, and the devastated home life. They say nothing of the men who have lost their characters and their jobs, and of the women who have lowered themselves beyond description because of their love for liquor. Let us in tenderness and heart-broken humility present to our Sunday School classes that picture, which is a disgrace to our nation. The wine may look red, and it may even go "smoothly down the throat" (a possible translation of the words "when it moveth aright," v. 31), but it still has the bite of a serpent and the sting of an adder (v. 32).

Aims and Duties

What are the aims which are at the same time duties?—they are the perfecting of ourselves, and the happiness of others.

Injustice

The injustice of men subverts the justice of God, and often His mercy.—Madame Swetchine.

Doing Good

"Doing good is the only certainly happy action of man's life."—Sir Philip Sidney.

Smart, Flattering Dresses

MRS. DICK EVANS has come to town and brought Ann and Eddie LeRoy with her. She lives in Palm Beach in the wintertime and, of course, knows all about style. That's why she wears this directoire type frock that is both new and figure flattering. In the floral print she has chosen she is perfectly gowned for the parties that will be given for her in the home town. The kiddies are wearing the simple styles appropriate to childhood and therein their smartness lies.

MOKENA

MOKENA SCHOOL BAND SEWS

If you hear a lot of tramping in town these days you'll know its a band member practicing his steps and learning how to respond to military orders. This is very important as we are now being drilled to march for parades. This brings to mind the thought of a Memorial Day program. We've heard that plans are in the making in the surrounding towns and we are anxious to know if we will be asked to take part in a Memorial Day service in Mokena.

(Editor's Note: The News-Bulletin will sponsor a Memorial Day service in Mokena this year the same as it has done in former years and the new Mokena Band will be asked to furnish the musical program.)

The beautiful quilt made by several band mothers will be awarded the evening of our concert, April 30th. The money thus made will be used to help pay for the dandy new sousaphone the Band Parents' Association bought for us. We appreciate every bit of help given us by the people of our district and will show our appreciation by working hard so that we will be a band you may be proud of.

"Pa" R. wants to know why some guy don't come along and keep his wife company so's he'd get a break? Always looking for breaks, aren't you Pa?

Who was the young couple that laughingly walked a mile and a half back to the dance hall after having a flat tire on a car they borrowed?

From the looks of things N. H. and P. are doing nicely. They certainly appeared to be having a grand time Wednesday night.

T. R. and a few other guys about town like to listen in on jokes every now and then.

D. W. must have had a reason for not wanting to go home after leaving the dentist office Wednesday night. Wonder what it could have been?

Diamond Lil has been feeling pretty good now after a lonely and blue week. Perhaps 'Yimmie' is back in circulation again.

Only made one mistake Hestie, when you tried to cover your identity by printing your own initials. By the way Graveyard doesn't happen to be "Diamond Lil". Graveyard is Diamond's boy friend. Those two couples did go up to Chicago Saturday night but not to spend the entire evening. And from all reports, E. M. stayed home Wednesday night. After dressing her three small daughters in their Easter finery and taking them to church, where they were baptized, Mrs. Jeanette Martin, twenty-five, returned to her Aurora home and strangled them. She then strung the clothesline she had used on the children from a door casing to a window casing and looped a noose about her neck, ending her own life.

Sheriff Harry C. George said two prisoners in the Vermilion county jail in Danville had attempted to escape by cutting through a rust-weakened sheet iron partition. The men, Melvin Day and Byron Goodard, were caught cutting on the wall, the sheriff said, but they were not near escape. A closed steel corridor and several locked doors were on the other side of the partition.

A United States District court jury in Springfield returned a verdict of guilty against two former officers of the National Aid society, mutual benefit insurance group, on charges of use of the mails to defraud. The two found guilty are A. C. Littlejohn, former secretary-treasurer of the society, and Henson C. Robinson, former director. They were alleged by the government to have sold low-priced insurance to the aged and infirm and to have settled claims for small amounts.

The Rio State bank at Rio, ten miles north of Galesburg, was closed for examination and adjustment by Edward J. Barrett, state auditor. The bank was listed as having $40,000 capital stock and deposits of $300,000. R. E. Davidson of Henderson is president.

Fire razed the two story frame plant of the Central Chemical company in Calumet City, causing damage estimated at $75,000. The presence of large quantities of nitric acid imperiled firemen. Much of the loss was due to water damage to acid in storage.

Scrap Iron for Europe's Arms Jams Freight Yards

Ports and freight yards of the United States are fast becoming jammed with freight cars loaded with scrap iron, owing to the lack of ships to carry the metal to European munition makers. This scene is typical of hundreds. Old railroad scrap, household utensils and other metal objects are being hurried abroad as fast as ships can take them.

MRS. GROUSE LEARNS MANY THINGS

ALL the time that Peter Rabbit and her other friends were worrying about her, Mrs. Grouse was very warm and very comfortable in the henhouse of Farmer Brown's boy. That first night she had slept soundly, for you know she had been very, very tired. In the morning when she had opened her eyes she couldn't think at first where she was. Then she remembered how she had been picked up by Farmer

She Peeped Out of the Box Timidly and Looked Around.

Brown's boy when she was too weak to fly and put in the box of hay, where she now was, and given all she could eat.

She peeped out of the box timidly and looked around. It was a strange place, a very strange place, to Mrs. Grouse. You see, never before in all her life had she slept under any roof excepting the thick, low hanging branches of a hemlock tree. Always she had been where she could spread her stout wings and whirl up and away when she pleased. But here she couldn't fly, because there were walls on all sides and a roof and no place to fly to. The very thought made her heart sink and frightened her. Along one side were rows of boxes with hay in them. In some of these were birds, who looked as if they might be relatives of hers, only they were ever so much bigger than she. And sitting on long sticks across one end were more of these birds.

Mrs. Grouse kept very still. None of these strange birds had noticed her and she didn't want them to. Little by little as she looked and listened she remembered things she had heard Uncle Billy Possum tell about Farmer Brown's henhouse. You know, Uncle Billy knows all about the inside of that henhouse. Somehow the things she was looking at were very like the things she had heard Uncle Billy tell about.

"Why!" she exclaimed, "I believe this is the very place!"

By and by she heard footsteps and she knew them for the footsteps of Farmer Brown's boy. All her old fear of him returned and she crouched down in her box all of a tremble. The door opened just wide enough for Farmer Brown's boy to squeeze through. You see, he was afraid that if he opened it wide Mrs. Grouse might get past him and fly away. So he squeezed through as narrow a space as he could and shut the door after him. He smiled down at Mrs. Grouse.

"How do you do this morning, Mrs. Grouse," said he, and his voice was low and very pleasant. "I suspect that you are anxious to get back to the Green Forest, but I am not going to let you—not yet, anyway. You see, that crust over the snow is just as hard and icy as ever and I am afraid that if I should let you go now you would have hard work to find enough to eat. You might starve to death. You are a great deal better off right here, even if you don't think so."

He got a piece of wire netting and fastened it over the box. Then he left some nice corn and barley for her and went away. Mrs. Grouse felt worse than ever. You see, now she couldn't even get out of her box. She felt that she was a prisoner, very much a prisoner, and such a feeling is dreadful. For a long time she couldn't even eat. But by and by she grew so hungry that she just had to eat. After that she felt better. A full stomach always makes one feel better. Pretty soon Mrs. Featherlegs discovered her and called all the other hens. They crowded around the box and made unkind remarks about Mrs. Grouse.

They asked her what business she had there, and made fun of her because she was so much smaller than they. And then Mrs. Grouse was very glad, indeed, of that wire netting which a little while before had seemed so hateful. When they finally left her alone she grew very thoughtful. She had learned many things—what the inside of Farmer Brown's henhouse was like, that Farmer Brown's boy could be very gentle, that even a hateful wire might prove a blessing, and much more.

First Aid to the Ailing House

PROPER DRAFT IN A CHIMNEY

FROM what I have seen of household heating plants and chimneys, I conclude that a great many complaints of insufficient heating are due to the poor condition of the heaters, and especially of the chimneys. With coal as a fuel, the briskness of the fire depends on good draft in the chimney, which is created by the rising of heated air in the chimney flue, and a continual supply of air at the bottom of the chimney in comparison with the air outside, the stronger will be the draft. By the construction of a chimney and a heater, the passage of the draft through the firebed supplies air that is necessary for combustion.

A heater is made with dampers by which the draft can be guided through the firebed when heat is needed, and at other times is passed into the chimney without going through the fire. For good operation, these should be the only points through which air can be drawn by chimney draft. When air can leak in anywhere else, the draft will be cut down, just as a flow of water from a garden hose will be cut down by a leaky connection.

There may be many places at which air can leak in. One very common place is around the connection of the smoke pipe to the chimney. Others are at defective mortar joints in the masonry of the chimney. The masonry should be tight, not only for a good draft, but because openings are common causes of fire.

To test the tightness of a chimney, a small and smoky fire is built; a fire of tar paper, for example. When smoke is coming out in good volume, a board is placed over the chimney top. No longer able to escape at the top, the smoke will find its way out of any openings that may be present elsewhere. These openings should be located, and the mortar removed.

Another test can be made with a lighted candle; the flame, when held close to leaks, will be sucked in. This test should be made around the chimney. Another usual air leak is around the clean-out door at the bottom of a chimney. An open joint

A MORNING IN THE GARDEN

A MORNING in the garden is just the nicest way that there can be, it seems to me, with which to start the day. About the nicest party that anyone can know is when the sun asks ev'ryone A-gardening to go.

That they invite you by. The jonquills and the tulips Are nodding with their heads, And sprouts of green you hadn't seen

Are peeping from their beds.

The Tyrannical Finger of Jupiter

HAVE you ever wondered just how purposeful this or that man or woman of your acquaintance might be—and how his or her purposes are expressed? The Finger of Jupiter will go far toward answering this interesting question with accuracy.

Forefingers vary, but not so greatly as one might think. Compare a hundred of them, and you will find that they fall within a comparatively small group of major classifications. Here is one that you will meet on hands where sometimes you would expect its indications least.

The Tyrannical Finger of Jupiter.

While most often found on the thickest primal type of hand, the tyrannical forefinger is not confined to any one kind of hand. In fact it is found on many a hand to which it hardly seems to belong. Its outstanding characteristics are easily recognized. These are: (1) Shortness, (2) thickness, (3) straightness. The knuckles of this type are full, though so well covered that their size is deceiving. The underside of the finger is usually heavily fleshed, so much so that when partly closed the finger has a puffed appearance. The nail tip is broad and well rounded. With the finger extended there is wider than average space between the forefinger and second finger.

With a finger of this type you may look for a personality that has difficulty in overcoming selfishness, and one, most certainly, that finds its greatest satisfaction in putting through activities from which self-gratification seems assured.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.

When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Silly Law Doomed

Washington.—Senator McKellar, Tennessee Democrat, arose in the senate recently to offer a bill that would repeal a provision of law prohibiting the employment of both man and wife by the government. It has been in effect since the summer of 1933. The provision ought to be and probably will be repealed because, as far as I can see, there is actually no sense in the national government refusing to employ efficient workers because a man's wife or a woman's husband already is on the federal pay roll.

It was not the importance of this particular repeal proposal, however, that interested me. Senator McKellar's action was significant and interesting only because when repeal of the so-called marriage clause and federal law was proposed, it marked the beginning of the end of one of the most abortive pieces of legislation that has been on our statute books. I refer to the so-called economy act of 1933.

I cannot refrain from recalling a prediction that I made when the economy act was before congress in 1933. It was introduced and supported by the New Deal legislature in an effort to carry out a campaign promise made when President Roosevelt was running for office in 1932. You will remember that he promised to reduce the cost of government twenty-five per cent, saying in many speeches that the cost of government was too high and that a reduction in taxes was necessary. It will be recalled likewise how he said that "Taxes come from the sweat of every man who labors."

Well, the economy act was driven through, despite declaration from many senators and many representatives that it was impossible to mutilate the structure of government as proposed in that bill and still have a government that would function properly. And here were some of the most ridiculous provisions in that legislation to come before congress in many years: They worked injustices on veterans of the World war, on farmers, on retired government workers, on the army and navy and marine corps, and hamstrung and handicapped government agencies in a manner I had not seen in my long experience as an observer of national affairs.

It was on that occasion that I made the prediction mentioned above, and to which I call attention because of the McKellar proposal for repeal of the marriage clause. I wrote at that time my definite conviction that the economy law was silly; that it would work hardships and that its basis was ninety per cent politics. I predicted further that within a year the politicians in the house and senate who had shouted so loudly about economy would begin to chisel various provisions out of that law. Each of those things has happened and now we see the end.

The end of the law has come but not the end of its effects. Practices in federal government administration that had been operating satisfactorily and efficiently throughout the years were thrown into the discard and new ideas substituted. The discarded methods were the development of experience and were serving the purposes for which they were intended. Some of them have been restored and are again functioning as they should but one can wander around through the maze of government corridors and find attempts still being made to make schemes work that are unsound in practice, schemes from the minds of theorists. It will be a number of years before the effects of the economy act will be obliterated.

As the chiseling began and the economy act fell to pieces under sounder thinking, there was launched the greatest spending orgy any nation ever witnessed. It has continued with unabated peculiarity and is still continuing notwithstanding the fact that within the last few weeks we have heard statements from administration sources to the effect that administration expenditures will be cut. The fact is they have not been cut.

But the average person outside of Washington sees and hears only things related to large totals of government spending such as relief for the destitute and vast programs of public building. They do not hear nor do they see what is going on among agencies of the government that relate to comparatively small items of money outgo. It is these small items, when taken together, that bulk so large even though by comparison with relief the total appears insignificant.

I am going to call attention to just one item, a small item as government expenses go, about which I suspect most persons who do me the honor to read these articles have had little information. They have had little information because they are in a position to see only isolated examples. I refer to government publications.

Representative Taber of New York called attention to the condition respecting government publications recently when the house appropriations committee was holding hearings on a bill appropriating funds for several government departments.

Mr. Taber estimated that government publications were costing in the neighborhood of twenty-million-dollars a year. He called them administration propaganda.

"Every organization in the government," Mr. Taber declared, "is sending out all sorts of propaganda, propaganda in fancy colors, pamphlets with pictures of resettlement projects, pictures of WPA propositions and all that sort of thing."

It was the first estimate I had been able to obtain of the cost of government publications for it is not easy to ascertain how much these beautifully done magazines cost each department or agency. Nor is it easy to determine how much is paid for the distribution of the countless thousands of statements issued for the press or mailed in millions of copies to voters. The whole thing constitutes a maze that is so complex that it is staggering. The government printing office lists 73 periodicals of the magazine type for which it will take subscriptions or sell individual copies. These, of course, are printed documents. They do not include the many pamphlets that are mimeographed or published otherwise by governmental agencies.

Weighing the Cost

I mentioned the distribution of official statements for the press and to voters throughout the country. There is no way, as far as I can see, to calculate the total, but one Washington correspondent recently took occasion to weigh the output of press statements from the Department of Agriculture for one week. His curiosity had been aroused by the tremendous volume that had been delivered to his office—both by mail and by special messenger—and so he weighed the week's grist. It totaled more than three and one-half pounds. This, as I said, was from only one department and the weight was the weight of the paper alone.

One need not employ a great deal of imagination to think of the cost involved. First there was the paper itself. In the second place there was the cost of typing the material and then of mimeographing it. But before it reached either one of these stages, it was necessary that a vast amount of work be done by well paid men and women writers and research workers who prepared the material that was used whether in mimeographing or in printing.

There are two publications that come to my desk regularly that strike me as being extraordinarily expensive. The "Consumers' Guide," a product of the Agriculture Adjustment administration and the "Electrification News," published by the Rural Electrification administration, are the two most expensive and most elaborate periodicals that I regularly see. They are sent out free not only to the Washington correspondents but to thousands upon thousands of voters—to any voter whose name either agency obtains. And they are paid for out of taxpayers' money.

Typographically, each of these periodicals is exceptionally well done from a magazine standpoint. They are replete with pictures, and copper engraving is expensive. And so it is throughout the government. Everywhere a correspondent goes among government offices he meets "federal workers," among the government personnel, engaged in preparing and distributing the government's stories for public reading.

Now, let me touch on another phase of the cost of government publications. I refer to the use of the franking privilege. As everyone knows, government mail goes through the United States mails without the payment of postage. That does not mean, however, that the railroads or the airplanes or the steamships haul that mail free. The only difference between that mail and the letters you write or receive is that the government pays the transportation lines on a pound basis and no stamps are used. It is bulk transportation whereas when you and I mail letters we pay the cost of transportation on those letters to the government by means of a postage stamp.

It is entirely proper and reasonable that government mail should not require postage stamps. It would simply be taking government money out of one pocket and putting it in another. Yet, in the end you and I, as taxpayers, pay for the transportation of the government mail and we pay for the millions of pieces that are sent out from the various government departments.

Father of the Cattle Trails

IF IT had not been for Joseph G. McCoy, there might never have occurred that epic migration over the cattle trails from Texas to the north during the seventies and eighties. In that case the history of the Lone Star state—and the whole West, for that matter—might have been very different. McCoy, a native of Springfield, Ill., was a stockman and cattle buyer who went to the raw little frontier town of Abilene, Kan., soon after the Civil war was over.

That conflict had ruined the cattlemen in Texas. Shut off from the Northern markets by the Union control of the Mississippi river, their herds had increased enormously, but without a place to sell the animals, they were comparatively worthless. Then the Kansas Pacific railroad, which was building west, reached Abilene and McCoy was inspired with a wonderful idea.

If he could get the Texas drovers to drive their herds north across Indian territory to Abilene, grazing them on the rich prairie grass as they came, Abilene would be the market place and shipping center where Texas sellers and Chicago and Kansas City buyers could meet. Despite many obstacles, including the prevalent belief that Texas beef was not as good as that grown in the Middle West, McCoy went about the job of making his dream come true.

In July, 1867, he began raising money to build a "shipping yard," a barn and office and to begin the construction of a large, three-story frame hotel for the accommodation of Texas drovers and eastern buyers. His next task was to get word to the cattlemen more than 400 miles away to the south. Although the time was short he managed to persuade enough of them to make the experiment so that they marketed 35,000 head of cattle in Abilene that fall and received approximately $15 a head for their steers. Previous to that time steers were selling for $5 a head in Texas.

The next year more than 75,000 cattle were marketed there. By 1871 that number had jumped to 120,000 and by the next year to 236,000. From that time on Texas cattle poured north by the hundreds of thousands over the original cattle trail from the Red river to Abilene and other trails which were laid out. Other Kansas "cow towns" began to boom with activity as the railroad was pushed farther west and southwest and there was added to our history that thrilling chapter when the cattleman was king. And all of this was due to the vision of one man—Joseph G. McCoy, the "Father of the Cattle Trails."

Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives

THEY gave Americans of their day the equivalent of the news reels of today. They were the pictorial historians of contemporary American life a century ago when newspapers contained little or no picture material except an occasional fashion print.

When a steamboat blew up, a great fire swept a city or some other disaster occurred, Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives immediately put out a colored picture of the event with plenty of action in it. When the United States was at war, they issued splendid battle pictures with plumed generals on prancing horses (and plenty of gory detail as to dead and wounded soldiers). There were pictures of horse races and other sporting events, there were pictures of swift clipper ships and pictures of the first transcontinental trains running amidst Indians and buffalo. There were highly moral pictures there were even "comic strips"—caricatures of life among the negroes, called "Darktown Comics."

It all started back in 1830 when young Nathaniel Currier, working as an apprentice to John Pendleton, who had returned from Europe with the new art of lithography, began thinking of setting up his own business. So he went to New York and started as a lithographer in partnership with a young man named Stoddard. This partnership lasted only a year but in 1835 Currier began again. He soon built up a profitable business but it wasn't until 1850 when James A. Ives became his partner that fame and fortune came to them.

For 30 years Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives were "printmakers to the American people" and Currier and Ives prints of one sort or another were to be found on the walls of virtually every American home. In 1880 Currier retired with a fortune but the firm continued with a son of the founder in his place. In 1888 machine color printing was applied to their product and even greater numbers of their pictures flooded the country.

In recent years Currier and Ives prints have become "Americana." Where once these prints sold from six cents to $3, they are now selling for anywhere from $20 to $500. And one of them recently brought $3,000!

AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Stuffed Shoulder of Lamb—One shoulder of lamb, two tablespoons chopped onion, three tablespoons cooking fat, two cups soft bread crumbs, one teaspoon chopped mint, one tablespoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Have the shoulder blade removed. This leaves a pocket for the stuffing. Wipe meat. Fry onion in fat, add bread crumbs, mint, celery leaves, salt and pepper. Mix well. Fill pocket with stuffing. Then roast.

A Mirror Brightens—Many housekeepers have found that a hanging mirror will often brighten up a dark corner.

Removing Tea Stains—Tea and coffee stains can sometimes be removed from china cups by rubbing them with a damp cloth dipped in baking soda.

To Remove a Tight Lid—Tie a piece of string round the tin two or three times, just below the lid; then push a pencil between the string and the tin, twist the pencil over, and the resulting pressure will release the lid.

Useful Velvet—If you are making anything of velvet do not throw away the pieces of material left over. Save them for using as polishers for your black-leaded stoves and for your shoes. You'll get a real mirror-like shine on both if you rub them with velvet after the usual polish has been applied.

Removing Grease Stains—Grease stains can be removed from cement walks and porches with a poultice made by dissolving four ounces of trisodium phosphate in a gallon of water and mixing in whiting until a paste of the consistency of mortar is obtained and plastering a layer of this over the stained area. When dry remove with a trowel or putty knife.

Cleaning Paintwork—Glossy paintwork should never be washed with soap and water, as it usually leaves a smeary surface. A teaspoonful of turpentine in warm water will make the cleaning a simple matter and will not scratch the paint.

Use Baking Sheets—Baking powder biscuits and cookies rise better and brown more evenly on baking sheets than they do in pans.

Capacity for Happiness Grows as One Develops

If there be pleasure in the exercise of any faculty or in the performance of any function, then there will be more happiness, the more the faculties are increased and enlarged. Then, the more faculties one possesses in number and the loftier they are in degree and the wider in range, the more the capacity for happiness. . . . If, then, you will make a man capable of all the happiness that is possible to a man, you must develop him, you must broaden him, deepen him, lift him, until you make of him all that is possible to press into the definition of a man.—M. Why Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRES GIVE MORE TRACTION

THE patented scientific arrangement and spacing of the deep, rugged bars of the tread make this tire self-cleaning. It will not clog or ball up, thus providing clean traction with every turn of the wheel. The deep rugged tread is held inseparably to the cord body because every cotton fiber in every cord has been soaked in pure liquid rubber by the Firestone Patented Process of Gum-Dipping. This gives the tire much greater strength to resist the strains of the extra "pull."

Ground Grip Tires save 25 per cent in time and 25 per cent in fuel. They give more traction and drawbar pull—ride easier and cut down repair bills.
